"Commencements." PETERSBURG, July 7, 1875. Messrs. Editors : Accept one more theory, doubtless the last, as to the meaning of "commencement." We say "the session begins, or opens," on some day in autumn; it "ends" on some day in summer. When the session ends vacation commences; and as the commencement of vacation is exceedingly agreeable to professors and students it is made the occasion of display and jollification, which they term "commencement," from the fact that it is the commencement of vacation. That is the natural and true signification of the word; and it is surprising that so vast an amount of intellectual power trying to define the term in any other way.

AN ALLEGED LETTER OF HIS EXAMINED-DOUBTS OF HIS HAVING WRITTEN IT.

To the Editor of the Tribune: Sir,—In one of my papers, just received, is an article headed "Memorable Letter from Daniel Webster." It seems to have been the case this season when the new fashionacommunicated to the Christian Union by ble skirts have gone to an extreme from the Mr. John S. C. Abbott, who youches for its liberation of the ballet. authenticity, though he says, "Where it A lidy was recently heard to say, with a

"The soul, secure in her existence, smiles At the drawn dagger, and defles its point,"

Mr. Jefferson fully concurred in this opinion, and observed that the tendency of the American mind was in a different direction; and that the Sunday school (he did not use our more correct word Sabbath) presented the only legitimate means under the Constitution of avoiding the rock on which the Freich Republic was wrecked.

Feeling quite sure that the expressions in this letter, and especially the words "Sabbath" and " Sabbath school," were not Websterian, I refreshed my memory by an examination of Mr. Webster's Life, by George Ticknor Curtis. From this work I find the

Mr. Webster met with an accident near Marshfield, which prevented his writing any letters for several weeks, except by an amanuensis, and when it was with difficulty that he could even sign his name. Thirdly. "On the 1st day of June, 1852, Mr. Webster was again in Washington," and on the 16th day of that month of the same year he wrote or dictated a letter, dated at Washington, to the Rev. Dr. Putnam, of Roxbury, Mass., and I conclude, therefore, that he could not have been at Marshfield on June 15, 1852, which is the date and piace of the newly-discovered letter to Mr. Pease. Fourthly, I find in his life a good many letters dated Sunday, and a good many references to Sunday, but never the use of the word Sabbath; nor do I believe that this word can be found in all of his writings, either as expressing or infimating any preference for it, as implied in the reported conversation with Mr. Jeffer-J. Society in Loudon.

Moncure D. Conway, in a recent letter to the Cincinnati Commercial, gives the following picture of English society:

For some time there has been observable in London a disposition to make innovations upon the conventional ways of social entertainment in private life. Theatre going has for many grown to be a serious and difficult task. For one thing, while the residences of the wealthy classes have migrated westward, the theatres have remained stationary, which good society bates. A little clasthe poet only echoed the general sentiment sical spectacle of a humorous character, written by Disraeli, "Ixion in Heaven," the main feature of which is Ixion's flutation with Juno, has been several times given. The ladies and gentlemen showed their artistic enthusiasm in one instance by following literally the rather audacious directions of the distinguished librettist in defince of Mrs. Grandy, whose monarchy is becoming limited. Some ludies of fashion issue cards for a series of soircés, at which musical artists perform with piano and violin from nine to half-past ten, the remainder being conversazione. One of the most charming evenings which the season has given us was a "Concert d'Invitation" given by Miss Elizabeth Philp, who took for the purpose the Beethoven rooms. A great charm was the singing of some little Spanish folk-sorgs by a lovely Spanish girl (Miss Gaetano), whose manuer, dress, look, all made a sort of chorus for her thome. A certain Monsieur des Roseaux gave some charming "Caansonettes Comiques" in French, the most amusing of which was a poet's highly sentimental meditation concerning "Midnight," every now and then broken in on by somebody's snore, and even more terribly by caterwaulings of a singularly natural character. Many of the ladies had chosen to sing ballads of Miss Philps's own composition, and our hostess herself sang very sweetly. Some of the most entertaining novelties in the way of social enjoyment have been afforded by various societies of gentlemen and ladies for special objects of
